

Digital Assets (cryptocurrency) Disclosure

Self-directed digital assets (also known as cryptocurrencies or crypto assets) are maintained in a digital wallet held by SAFE, Inc., a Wyoming trust company. They are not credit union or bank products.

Digital assets offered through SAFE are:

Not federally insured

Digital assets are not covered by NCUA, FDIC or SPIC insurance. If the digital asset company that holds your funds goes out of business, your money may be lost and never recovered.

Not federally regulated

Without such regulations there are no legal standards for consumer protection issues such as privacy and security.

Risky

While some consumers use digital assets to pay for things, others use it as part of their investment strategy, hoping they increase in value. But like any investment, this is not a sure thing! The value of digital assets can be erratic and adjust rapidly; therefore, they are considered a high-risk investment. Because investing in digital assets is speculative, you should only buy what you can afford to lose.
